

The latitude of a point on the Earth is its angle from the equator, measured along a meridian. Latitudes are usually specified as something like 30° N or 30° S for locations in the northern and southern hemisphere respectively. Alternatively, they can be specified as 30° and -30° respectively.